

The planet Voga gained universal notoriety when it became embroiled in the “The Cyber War”. Although not directly involved in the Cyber war, the Vogon people supplied gold which one of the warring factions (a group of ex-patriot humans) used as weapons to fight their enemies, the Cybermen.

Voga had a planetary core made almost entirely of gold, which their human allies had discovered was an effective weapon against Cybermen. Although the humans managed to virtually wipe out the Cybermen faction with which they were at war, (the CyberNomads), the Vogon’s involvement proved to be very costly.

As a last mighty show of power the Cybermen turned their war effort towards Voga. Voga was subjected to a massive missile assault, which saw half of the planet wiped out, and the half that was left blown out of its orbit and flung through space. The last ship of the once mighty CyberNomad fleet gave chase. Voga finally ended its uncontrolled spin through the universe in our own solar system, and was caught in the gravitational pull of Jupiter. Many hundreds of Vogons had survived the Cyber assault and subsequent spin through space by sheltering in subterranean ‘survival chambers’. Fearing the pursuit of the Cybermen, the Vogons decided that rather than returning to the surface of their planet they would remain hidden underground. In an effort to remain undiscovered the Vogons have avoided all outside contact, eking out an existence in their underground world.
